Protest in Iraq and Lebanon, Iran Rulers' Interests at Risk

By Leila Jadidi: Rulers of Iranian regime have dug-in as both the governments of Iraq and Lebanon stagger and stumble under waves of popular protest. These antigovernment protests have also shown hostility toward Iranian rulers. Consequently, the regime interests are at risk...Continued on page 2

Weekly Speech of Mehdi Samee

Iran, after US intervention of Iraq

Let me first address Khamenei's talk about developments in the uprisings of the Iraqi and Lebanese people. In his remarks, Khamenei blasted about national security and law. He spoke as if he abides law while he has a position and authority above the law. In a military ceremony, Khamenei said: "The enemy seeks to undermine the legal structures of Iraq and Lebanon". Let's pause here: Khamenei mercenaries, who obstruct the legal process, are in both Lebanon and Iraq. Hezbollah is practically infiltrating and threatening to block many processes taking place in Lebanon, as well as Khamenei's mercenaries in Iraq (forces known as Hashid al-Shaabi).

But again, in his perpetual way of creating an enemy, he said: "The main factor and cause of these dangerous betrayals and hatreds". We can see how he calls the movement of people's litigation and the movement of people's justice and the movement of people's liberation, "betrayal" and "hatred". He says the perpetrators of these treacherous acts are known and the US and Western intelligence services are backing them by money from some countries in the region, he means Saudi Arabia. He claims the same about the Mass uprising in Iran which took place 2 years ago. Continued on page 2

Weekly speech from page 1... Khamenei and his despotic regime connect every liberation movement to the "US and Saudi Arabian Dictators". These movements always get associated with the foreign enemy in order to confront with people's movement. Dictators, in general, when confronted with the people's movements, always associate them with the foreign enemy.

Khamenei himself is a symbol of insecurity and lawlessness in countries like Iraq. Khamenei and the Iranian regime in general are the main factor of the instability that ensued, the sectarian wars, the intensification of religious conflicts that arose after the occupation of Iraq. That is why Khamenei orders and commands and recommends his criminal gangs such as Hashed al-Sha'abi, "First, you must quiet the movement, then people can put forward their demands". This is Khamenei's constant scheming, and that is why he has created and hired these criminal groups known as the Hashal al-Shaba'i for years against the Iraqi people. After the US intervention and occupation of Iraq, and their inability to resolve the conflicts that existed many power authorities gradually gave way to Khamenei's rise to power, at its peak during the rule of Nouri al-Maliki. But the good thing is that the Iraqi people, especially in the areas where considered to be the area where the regime was influenced, Shiites, they joined the movement in Baghdad and in Najaf in Karbala in Basra. And same glorious movements in Lebanon.

Protest in Iraq from page 1... It is for that reason that Ayatollah Khamenei inveighed against the protests, a signal of the danger he sees lurking in them. Khamenei, as usual claimed, "The U.S. and Western intelligence agencies, with the help of money from regional countries, are instigating unrest in the region".

Officials and conservative commentators in Iran have branded the uprisings as "sedition", a term they used for domestic antigovernment demonstrations in 2009 and 2017. Those protests in Iran and Arab countries today are rooted in the economy, unemployment, and frustration at governmental corruption.

A number of news media around the world are reporting on the events. The New York time writes "Khamenei said in his speech that he had ordered security forces to be on alert to counter the uprisings. His comments suggested he may have wanted Iran's Shiite proxies in Iraq and Lebanon to attack the crowds. The Hezbollah organization in Lebanon and many pro-Iranian militias in Iraq operate under the guidance of Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps".

A Political Earthquake in the Middle East

A political earthquake in the Middle East has shaken the foundations of the Islamic caliphate of the velayat-e faqih regime. Rulers of Iran have spent billions of dollars to develop their foreign influence and build bases to maintain and enforce it. Now, millions of protesters are taking to the streets of the capitals targeting them.

The uprisings that began sporadically in Iraq and Lebanon against poverty, unemployment and government unfair disruption of services are now targeting the overall political order. In Baghdad and Beirut, Basra and Tripoli, demonstrators are not only demanding the overthrow of the government but are pushing for the abolition of a quota-political-sectarian order that originates in the provincial governorate's regime, as well.

Religious and ethnic affiliations in this system constitutes politics and political power. Political parties and political groups appear on political scene in the role of representatives of followers of a particular religion or ethnicity. Thus, the quota order implies to the people that their religious orientation is their political identity and that their religious insight determines their status, and affiliation in the political and class ranks. This corrupt system is the window through which the Islamic regime of Iran enters the political and social environment of Iraq and Lebanon. They do so through massive financial spillover, recruitment, bombing of religious propaganda, assassination and aggressive propagation of its ideology to a level of political power and influence. People have seen how the ruling elite, of every religion and ethnicity, are immersed in corruption and wealth. They have seen how the representatives of this branch and that branch set up their own shops. The economic pressure and corruption of the rulers have stirred up contradictions that neither yesterday's tribal or tribalism nor the oppression and killing of today can be covered and suffocate.

Attacks of protesters on consulate of Iranian Regime and its blockade in Karbala are, in every sense, a powerful symbol of this change.

Karbala, where bears great amount of religious propaganda and has an unparalleled position in its campaign to arouse emotion, mobilize power and gain legitimacy throughout the Shiite world, has been confronted by anger by these uninvited guests Tehran's caliphs have called on pilgrims not ...continue on page 3...

A political earthquake from page 3... to travel to Karbala and those still present to leave Karbala "as soon as possible"

What goes on in Baghdad, Karbala, and Nasiriyah and is stepped on and thrown away, being trampled on and besieged is the bloody and devastating aspirations of an overburdened regime with the help of oil dollars, militarism, and religious intolerance. The regime would lose as much as it has put it shares in sectarian order.

Military invasion of Syrian Kurdistan is a war crime!

The Turkish military has launched a military assault on Syrian Kurdistan (Rojava) by Erdogan's order. In the wake of this criminal act, men and women in the region have mounted heroic resistance. At the same time, widespread protests around the world have been ongoing. Supporters include progressive forces, human rights organizations, and Kurds around the world, including Kurdish compatriots, who rightfully condemned this war crime.

Erdogan's government defends and follows the chauvinistic thinking of the Muslim Brotherhood, within the dream of reviving the Ottoman Empire. This is similar to religious supreme leader regime of Iran to plan and created an "Islamic State" and a "Shiite Crescent" whose heart and brain are in Khamenei's establishment.

Turkish-dominated border crossing on Syrian-Kurdish soil and the deportation of millions of homeless Syrian refugees who have fled their country due to the crackdown on Damascus butchering, intensify ethnic tensions and hatred and victimize Syrian refugees. Turkey's invasion of Syria will also open the Iranian regime's hands to continue supporting dictator Bashar al-Assad.

By condemning the Syrian Kurdistan strikes, I believe the call for a "No flight zone" by a number of PKK activists is the most urgent measure to contain Erdogan's aggression and prevent the killing of civilians. This desire is justified and the international community can be pressured to do so.
